Do You have “Full Coverage” Auto Insurance?

Full coverage is a term widely used in the insurance world. The problem is that “full coverage” [and “liability only”] are terms that are not completely understood by the vast majority of the general public, and they are commonly misused.

Some folks erroneously define liability only as bodily injury and property damage coverage, uninsured motorist bodily injury coverage, and collision deductible waiver for uninsured motorist property damage. But they are wrong, it’s not liability only, because it has uninsured motorist coverage, which California law requires, unless you sign a waiver.

Those same people would also erroneously say that by adding comprehensive and collision to that “liability only” policy, that it is now a full coverage policy. Nope.... they are missing many coverage’s, so how can it be full coverage, without every coverage available?

Other auto insurance coverage’s include: medical, towing & roadside service, rental car reimbursement, loss of use, glass deductible buyback, additional equipment, residual debt, trailer coverage, original equipment manufacturer parts endorsement, auto death indemnity and specific disability, rental trailer/camper unit endorsement, and a few other seldom needed coverage’s.

The best way to know understand how auto insurance coverage’s work, and what coverage’s you need is to have a face to face meeting with your professional insurance agent. 1-800 insurance will not give you the advice that you need to make these important decisions. It’s expensive and not fun to learn after the fact, that your claim is not covered, because you don’t have the right coverage’s in place.

August History Quiz

Instead of our usual history quiz, I decided to lighten it up and have some fun with famous movie quotes. The last time we did this was November of last year, and we had a great response. Write the movie title in the space provided.

The first person to return all the correct answers will receive a $50 gift card for Justin Michael’s Salon in Dublin. Last month’s winner of a gift card for Nothing Bundt Cakes in Dublin was Julie Zych from Preferred Financial in San Ramon. Julie also won the June history quiz; she is truly hard to beat and she gets the quiz back quickly, so don’t hesitate or Julie will prevail again! Good Luck!
